Q4. Read the passage given below and answer the questions that follow.

My beautiful new watch had run eighteen months without losing or gaining, and without breaking any part of its machinery or stopping. I had come to believe it infallible in its judgements about the time of day, and to consider its constitution and its anatomy imperishable. But, at last, one night, I let it run down. I grieved about it as if it were a recognised messenger and forerunner of calamity. But by and by I cheered up, set the watch by guess and commanded my superstitions to depart.

Next day, I stepped into the chief jeweller's to set it by the exact time. The head of the establishment took it out of my hand and proceeded to set it for me. Then he said, 'She is four minutes slow—regulator wants pushing up.' I tried to stop him and implored him to let the watch alone; but he cruelly did the shameful deed.

My watch began to gain. It gained faster and faster day by day. Within a week it sickened to a raging fever and its pulse went up and up. At the end of two months, it had left all the timepieces of the town far behind and was a fraction over thirteen days ahead of time. It was away into November enjoying the snow, while the October leaves were still turning yellow.

I took it to the watchmaker to be regulated. He had a look of vicious happiness and eagerly pried the watch open, and then put a small dice-box into his eye and peered into its machinery. He said it wanted cleaning and oiling. After this, my watch slowed down to that degree that it ticked all appointments I go to, missing my dinner, I gradually drifted back into yesterday, then the day before, then into last and the world was out of sight.

I went to the watchmaker again. He took the watch all to pieces and took three days to sort it right. After this the watch averaged well, but nothing more. But a correct average is only a mild virtue in a watch. Following another visit to another watchmaker it would run a while and then stop a while, using its own discretion about the intervals, and so I went again to have the watch repaired. It now performed unexceptionably, except that often after few hours, everything inside would fall apart and begin to buzz like a bee. Its hands would spin round and round, so fast, that they simply seemed a delicate spider's web over the face of the watch.

The watch had cost two hundred dollars and I seemed to have paid out two or three thousand for repairs.
